

Book Sharing

There are many ways to share books with young children – reading is only one of them! Sharing books looks different for each child, but it can begin as soon as they are born (and even before). Sharing books is a way to create positive memories for children. This helps them make positive connections to books and learning.

7 Tips and Ideas

- Find a comfortable space.
Sit close together. Turn off distractions (like the TV, computer, or phone).
- Make it part of your day.
Try to share a book every day, even for 15 minutes. It could be part of your bedtime routine or other quiet time.
- Get children involved.
Children can hold or touch the book. Let them choose the book. Ask questions, and help them ask, too. “What do you think happens next?”
- Learn from pictures and shapes.
Point out letters, numbers, and pictures. Use the pictures to tell your own story, or ask them to use the pictures to tell you a story.
- Use all your senses.
Change your voice for different characters, look at pictures, imagine sounds and smells, feel the pages.
- Connect the book to your child’s world.
Find examples of things your child already knows. “This cat is like the cat next door!” or “Remember when we saw a bear, too?”
- Share a story in your home language.
Share the story (or make up your own!) in the language(s) you use every day. You can use a book in any language.

Saskatchewan
Literacy
Network

Book Sharing

It's okay...

... if your child doesn't want to finish the book.

Practice opening and closing the book. Stop, and start the story again another time. You don't need to read it all every time.

... to do something else if children are fussy or restless.

Come back to the book later, so sharing the book is a positive time for both of you.

... if a child picks the same favourite book that you read many, many times. It's an important part of memory and learning, too!

Did you know?

- Sharing books builds an emotional bond between children, their families, and books. These bonds help strengthen children's learning and prepares them for school and life.
- Book sharing is great way to help children build their language and memory skills, and learn letters and shapes.
- Sharing books helps children know that words and books have meaning, and builds language and communication skills.
- Any positive way you share a book together is good! Make up your own story, look at pictures, read the book, imagine a different ending.

Saskatchewan
Literacy
Network